BRADLEY OPENS G. O. P. CAMPAIGN

With a Very Bitter Attack
On Roosevelt.

TOUCHES DEMOCRATS LIGHTLY

And Skims Over the Charges
Of Fraud at the Chicago Convention.

DEFENDS HIS BELOVED PARTY

Lexington, Ky., Sept. 21.—Formally opening the Republican campaign in Kentucky here to-day, Senator W. O. Bradley devoted practically the whole of his speech to an attack on Col. Roosevelt and a defense of President Taft and his Administration. What is more, he defended the Chicago convention and found no fault with the methods resorted to by Taft and his managers to secure the Republican nomination.

It was a typical Bradley speech, replete with picturesque and Bradleysque language. For those who declined to condone the infamous Chicago steal, Senator Bradley had words of abuse and condemnation. He could see no good in men who would desert the old Republican party even if everything was not as it should have been at Chicago. The speaker made use of the old threadbare argument that the Progressive party was made up of disgruntled and disappointed office-seekers.

One naturally expected the Senator to pay his respects to Col. Roosevelt and he did. He referred to the former President as a political ingrate and a selfish politician. Addressing himself to the Progressives, Senator Bradley asked them not to desert the old Republican party.

Roosevelt, he said, was running as a Progressive and not as a Republican and the Senator could not understand why it is that hundreds of thousands of voters are deserting the Republican party. He appealed to them not to turn their backs on its traditions; on its glorious record, and not to vote against the party for whose policies their fathers fought and died.

Little of the Senator's speech was directed to the Democrats. Once or twice he digressed to pour a volley or two into the Democrats, but in the main his speech was directed at Roosevelt and the Progressives, although he spent considerable time in defense of Taft and the Chicago steal. Senator Bradley went out of his way to praise Senator La Follette, whom he called the real leader of the Progressives, for declining to follow Roosevelt.

The principal speaker besides Senator Bradley was former Congressman Ralph D. Cole, of Ohio. William Worthington, the lawyer, who directed the fusion campaign in Lexington last year, presided, and the big crowd in the Opera House gave the speaker a cordial reception.

Mr. Cole defended President Taft and his administration, and declared the Executive right in common justice to be re-elected.

Discussing the bitter fight at Chicago, Senator Bradley said:

"After the Chicago convention defeated Mr. Roosevelt, he and his friends for the first time discovered the necessity for the creation of a new party, because, as he said, the old parties had lost their usefulness and were mere husks, but in reality because he was not nominated. In the convention of this new party, Mr. Roosevelt was nominated, not as a Republican candidate, but as a so-called Progressive candidate for President."

"I pause to inquire whether, if Mr. Roosevelt had been nominated at the Republican National Convention at Chicago, there is any sane man who doubts that he would have accepted the nomination and his new party never been heard of."

"The new party was formed because the Republican Party, as claimed, had become obsolete in twenty-four hours. It so became because it did not nominate Roosevelt."

Mr. Bradley then entered into an elaborate defense of the National Committee and approved its course in deciding the various contests in favor of Taft. He said there was nothing unusual in the action of the National Committee this year, except that on account of the cry of fraud, Mr. Taft insisted that the meetings should be open to the representatives of the press, while heretofore they had been held behind closed doors. The Roosevelt contests were without merit, he said, and the committee did right in so deciding.

Naturally the Senator defended the Republican convention in Kentucky, although he forgot to mention that the Taft delegates were made up in a large part of Federal officeholders, many of them being postmasters. And yet this is what the Senator had to say about Kentucky.

"If every delegate had been given to Mr. Roosevelt in our State convention who was seated and all who were contested, there would have been a majority for Mr. Taft of 297. No Roosevelt candidate was placed in nomination in that or any other State convention, and notwithstanding these facts, contests were made to unsettle three of the delegates who had been elected from the State-at-large unanimously, on motion. And yet Col. Roosevelt denounced the outrageous frauds in Kentucky."

"There never have been in the history of any party such unjustifiable contests, and because of failure which the contestants knew in advance would result, it has been heralded all over the country that Mr. Taft stole his delegates."

"You have heard much talk of the steam roller. I never heard that expression until in the convention of 1908, which was dominated by Mr. Roosevelt, when it was run ruthlessly over delegates who were fairly elected for Fairbanks and others. Notwithstanding this fact, however, there was no bolt from the convention, but every defeated delegate returned to his home and went earnestly to work in the interest of Mr. Taft because those men were Republicans. I was unfairly and unjustly defeated for delegate in the State convention, but I did not even make a contest. I said then and there that every Republican who had entered that convention was bound by its action and should unhesitatingly support the nominee at Chicago."

Speaking of the formation of the new party, Senator Bradley said that the action of Mr. Roosevelt and those associated with him is without justification and is an act of ingratitude to the party which honored Mr. Roosevelt time and again. He said that even if Mr. Roosevelt's delegates were stolen from him at Chicago, the Republican party was not responsible and its destruction not justified. The Senator insisted that if Mr. Roosevelt was determined to bolt, he should have made his fight as an Independent Republican and not as the leader of a new party, and thus attempt to destroy the Republican party.

Mr. Oppe Kittinger was in Hartford a few days last week, helping Barnard & Co. invoice goods.

Mrs. J. C. Bennett was in Hartford Thursday.

Federation's Views.

The American Federation of Labor condemns President Taft in severe terms, as an enemy of labor. It is unsparing in its criticism of the Republican party and President Taft and is neutral as between Col. Roosevelt and Gov. Wilson, declaring that both Roosevelt and Wilson are outspoken in favor of the reforms which labor seeks to have enacted into law.

TAFT IS NOT FIT TO BE PRESIDENT

Democrats and Teddy Men Agreed on This.

CONDITIONS ARE RECALLED

Which Existed in 1860—Fine
Speech of Lieut. Gov.

McDermott.

HE DRAWS GOOD COMPARISON

Lieut. Gov. McDermott, at the Lexington Democratic rally last week, said in part:

"It is fit that the Democrats of Kentucky should have their first meeting to ratify the nomination of Wilson and Marshall in the old Ashland district, a district made famous by Henry Clay, Thomas Marshall, John C. Breckenridge, Joseph Blackburn and Col. William Breckenridge. Lexington in the early days was justly called the Athens of the West. It is still the center of a prosperous, cultivated and patriotic people."

"The Republican party to-day is in the same position relatively as that occupied by the Democratic party in 1860. At the convention in Charleston, S. C., in April and May, 1860, the followers of Douglas and Breckenridge could not agree as to the platform or the candidate, because of the differences over slavery. The convention was adjourned to Baltimore in June; but, as the differences were irreconcilable, Douglas was nominated by one side and John C. Breckenridge by the other. Then Breckenridge received in the election 845,763, and Douglas received 1,275,157, while Lincoln got 1,806,352 votes."

"Lincoln had a majority over both in the electoral college. To-day the Republican party is split in the same way. Roosevelt says that Taft is not fit to be President, as we agree; and Taft, says, as we know, that Roosevelt is not fit. Roosevelt says, as we know, that Taft could not have been nominated without the votes of States which no Republican could carry. Roosevelt in the Republican convention purposely made innumerable contests that he knew were not sincere—that, in fact, were preposterous, and that his own friends abandoned. That is a familiar political trick, unworthy of a 'hero.' We know that Mr. Taft would never have been nominated four years ago if Roosevelt had not used all the power of the Government to compel the making of that nomination; and it is probable that Mr. Taft got his nomination this time as fairly as most Republican candidates got theirs for many years."

"The true destiny of this republic is not to become a paternal Government, not to become a rich, warlike Power, not to levy heavy taxes on the thrifty in order to coddle and increase dependents. Far otherwise! Our destiny is to preserve reasonable, rational liberty, and to promote the happiness of our thrifty people in simplicity and comfort under a noble and venerable Constitution, with equal rights to all and special privileges to none. We must meet new problems and new troubles as they rise, and dispose of them with justice and wisdom, according to the tenets of our ancestors, but with all the light that ancient or modern times can give to our footsteps. We must not give out poison with one hand and antidotes with the other. We must not destroy our commerce by a high protective tariff and then give bounties to shippers or shipbuilders. Not favors all around, but strict justice to everybody, will give most happiness to all."

"The Democratic party to-day offers us a safe refuge from all these heresies and dangers. We have a splendid and sound platform, which any true 'progressive' can conscientiously support. Our leaders are men of probity, ability and public spirit. New Jersey has given to us a scholarly, high-minded and successful Governor for the Presidency in the person of Woodrow Wilson. Indiana has also given us a popular and able Governor in the person of Thomas R. Marshall for the Vice Presidency. They are not only good men and strong men, but they assure us of a deserved and splendid victory."

RURAL SCHOOLS SHOW A BIG IMPROVEMENT

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 23.—Forty counties have availed themselves of the privilege granted by the last Legislature of employing supervisors of rural schools to assist their county superintendents. There are sixty-five supervisors now employed in the State, according to reports received by State Supervisor of Rural Schools T. J. Coates. These supervisors visit the rural schools and direct their efforts toward establishing uniformity in the schools and directing the work of inexperienced teachers. Prof. Coates said Kentucky in the last year has made a greater advance in the supervision of rural schools than any other State.

The two State supervisors expect during the year to pay personal visits to sixty counties.

Secretary Thomas Vinson, of the Kentucky Educational Association, has completed his report of the last meeting of the association, embodying every speech delivered and giving the names of all the members. It is the most complete report ever made and embraces 300 pages.

A PLEASANT DAY SPENT IN CAUSE OF A. S. OF E.

Meeting With Heflin Local Very Enjoyable Affair—Some Good Advice.

Heflin, Ky., Sept. 23, 1912.

Editors Herald:—We wish to beg space in which to give an account of the Hartford Magisterial District meeting of the A. S. of E., which met with Heflin Local Union at Chapman schoolhouse on Saturday last.

Though the morning was cloudy and it looked very much as though we would have a rainy day, about 9:30 o'clock the people began to gather in and by 10 o'clock the schoolhouse was comfortably filled. At this time the meeting was called to order by the chairman, Mr. G. P. Jones, with Mr. Byron Bean at his place as secretary.

After a song, prayer was offered by Rev. T. H. Balmain. This was followed by a welcome address to the delegates and visitors present delivered by Mr. T. F. Tanner. The response was made by Bro. Balmain and was highly enjoyed by all present.

After the appointment of a committee on resolutions, program and auditing by the chair, the time up until noon was taken up in hearing reports from the various locals in the district.

At noon we adjourned to the shade of a spreading oak, where the ladies spread a bountiful feast and the next hour was spent in doing justice to the boiled ham, baked mutton, fried chicken and other good things too numerous to mention, not least of which was a keg of fresh cider furnished by Mr. A. L. Baird.

At 1:30 o'clock we were called to order and after hearing the reports of the various committees, the afternoon was spent in a general discussion of the reports of committees and other things of interest to organized farmers. At about 5 o'clock we adjourned to meet with Beda local the 3d Saturday in December.

Taking it all in all, it was the verdict of all present that it was a day well spent. The only regret we heard expressed was that more people were not present to enjoy it with us. Now just a word to the Equity people of this county. If you are not keeping up these district meetings, you are making a sad mistake and are not living up to your privilege, for a day spent thus occasionally is not only very pleasant and adds greatly to the social good fellowship of the community, but is a good investment financially. Hoping we may have more such meetings and that you may all enjoy them, is the wish of ONE PRESENT.

The first double electrocution in Kentucky will be held at the Eddyville penitentiary Friday, September 27, at sunrise, when James Smith and Charles Smith, negroes, of Paducah, will pay the penalty for murder.

A CLEAN-UP DAY SET FOR OCT. 8

By Gov. McCreary in Latest Proclamation.

CALLS ATTENTION OF PEOPLE

To Great Fire Losses and Suggests Same Can be Prevented.

SHOULD OBSERVE THE DAY

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 21.—Declaring that the losses by fire every year in this country exceed those of any other civilized nation and that many of them could be prevented by the exercise of ordinary precaution, Gov. McCreary, following the precedent of the last few years, to-day issued a proclamation, designating October 8 as "Clean-up Day" and requesting all the citizens of Kentucky to clean up rubbish on their premises, place heating apparatus in proper condition and inspect their chimneys.

The proclamation follows:

"The losses by fire in this country, of insured and uninsured property, total every year more than $200,000,000, and are largely in excess of that of any other civilized nation. This is a loss which can be curtailed by proper precaution. The large payments by insurance companies, as well as the enormous personal loss of property which is uninsured, is an expense which should be decreased. The reduction of the fire loss would naturally tend to reduce the expense of the protection afforded by fire insurance companies and like organizations, and thus inure to the benefit of those who avail themselves of this form of protection. It is our duty, as good citizens, to do all within our power to prevent this waste and needless loss of property, and it is, therefore, the part of wisdom to join with the people of other States in setting aside a day in which we bring to public attention this important duty. The Legislature has enacted laws for the punishment of the crime of arson, but it is not always the crime of arson that produces these losses. It is frequently carelessness, negligence or the failure to exercise due precaution."

"The losses in Kentucky by fire, on which insurance was paid last year, were $3,692,303.83; the premiums paid to secure fire insurance last year were $5,272,438.57, and these figures do not begin to cover the unprotected waste by fire."

"Now, therefore, I call upon the citizens of Kentucky to set aside October 8, 1912, as a day on which to give special attention to the removal from their premises of rubbish, which might cause fire, for placing heating appliances in proper condition, the examination of chimneys, flues and such other appliances which so frequently are the direct cause of fire losses, to look into premises where articles which might produce spontaneous combustion are kept, and for the destruction of ignitable material deposited in places where it might endanger property by fire."

"I further recommend that on that day instructions be given to the pupils in public and private schools concerning the exercise of care in the use of matches and all combustible materials, and that laborers in factories and other places of industry be duly cautioned on this subject."

"In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Commonwealth to be affixed."

LIABILITIES $35,000— BANKRUPTCY PETITION

Stating in his voluntary petition in bankruptcy that he has filed in the office of the Federal Court Clerk in Owensboro, that he is in debt to the extent of $35,476, and that he is unable to liquidate his indebtedness, Chas. F. Frayer, who states that he is a laborer engaged at the Taylor Mines in Ohio county, prays the court that he be adjudged a bankrupt.

The petitioner states that the Relforte Trust company, of Tyrone, Pa., holds his note for $17,500, while the remainder of his indebtedness is due banks and mercantile houses in Altoona, Pa. The petitioner does not list any assets, although from the petition it seems that at one time he owned stock in the Walnut Coal company at Altoona.

CANVASSERS AT WORK GETTING SIGNATURES

To Five-Year Pooling Plan—Association Is Receiving Encouragement.

The Owensboro Messenger says: According to the statement of Walter Atherton, secretary of the Green River Tobacco Growers' Association, the canvassers, who at this time are busily engaged in working throughout the county, securing the signatures of the many poolers in the different pooling associations, to pledges that they will pool all of their tobacco and all the tobacco grown on lands under their control for the next five years, are meeting with great success.

Mr. Atherton stated that he received reports from several of the canvassers on Thursday and that all of them reported that they are meeting with great encouragement and that the pledges are being readily signed by the poolers as soon as the proposition is explained to them.

Secretary Atherton also stated that he had received some reports as to the crop conditions and that the outlook continues to give more encouragement than it did at first. When asked as to what effect the cool weather would have, he stated that on the tobacco that is still in the field it will have a tendency to increase its weight and will be beneficial to it, while it will aid materially in bringing the tobacco already in the barns in better shape for it to be properly cured.

A considerable amount of tobacco in the lower part of the county was damaged by the storm that visited the county a few days ago, it being reported by some of the farmers that the hail cut many of the leaves and others reported that it had in many places stripped the leaves from the stalks and blown them over the fields, doing great damage.

THE SCHOLASTIC CAREERS OF MEN

Who Became Presidents of United States.

THE STANDING IN CONGRESS

Along Educational Lines and the Vocations Which Are Represented.

GOV. WILSON'S HIGH STANDING

The part that the university has played in placing men in the Presidential chair, with the possible exception of Garfield, has never been so important as in the case of Woodrow Wilson. Those college men who really have inner faith in their college, and respectful gratitude for the teachers of their college, should have no doubt as to how to cast their vote.

President Washington (1789-97) quit school when he was 16, and never taught. John Adams (1797-1801) graduated (1755) from Harvard, and taught two years in a preparatory school at Worcester, Mass. Jefferson's (1801-9) graduation (1763) from William and Mary, and his founding of the University of Virginia, and his illustrious services to his country are familiar. Madison (1809-17) graduated (1771) from Princeton, took one year of graduate work at the same place, but never taught. Monroe (1817-25) attended William and Mary for two years, and then entered a law office. John Q. Adams (1825-29) graduated from Harvard (1787) and became a lawyer.

Andrew Jackson (1829-37) never studied and never taught. Van Buren (1837-41) never studied and never taught. W. H. Harrison (1841) received a classical education at Hampden Sidney (1787-90), then began the study of medicine in Philadelphia, but became a lawyer in 1791. Tyler (1841-45) graduated (1807) from William and Mary, and became a lawyer. Polk (1845-49) graduated (1818) from the University of North Carolina and became a lawyer. Taylor (1849-50) never studied and never taught. Fillmore (1850-53) never attended college, taught in the elementary schools, and studied law at the same time. Pierce (1853-57) graduated (1824) from Dickinson, and is best known for his shying at the Civil War.

Abraham Lincoln's (1861-65) lack of educational training is uniquely familiar. Johnson's (1865-69) poor educational opportunities are well known. Grant (1869-77) graduated (1843) from West Point, the twenty-first in a class of 30, and became a soldier. Hayes (1877-81) graduated (1842) from Kenyon College and the Harvard Law School (1845).

President James A. Garfield (1881) graduated (1856) from Williams, became professor of Ancient Languages at Hiram College, and later President of the same institution.

Chester A. Arthur (1881-85) graduated (1841) from Union College, taught in the elementary schools and studied law at the same time. Grover Cleveland (1885-89, 1893-97) prepared for Hamilton, but never attended. Benjamin Harrison (1889-93) graduated (1852) from Miami and became a lawyer. McKinley (1897-1901) attended Allegheny College for a while, taught a while, and became a lawyer. Theodore Roosevelt (1901-9) graduated (1880) from Harvard and attended for a short while the Law School of Columbia University. President Taft (1909-13) graduated (1878) from Yale, second in his class, and tied for first honors on graduation from the Law School of Cincinnati College.

In short, of the 26 different Presidents, six have been notably "uneducated," five have been "liberally educated," one has received a military education, and 14 have taken the traditional college A. B. degree.

In the present Congress the college situation is as follows: Of the 92 Senators, 61 are college graduates. None are teachers by vocation. Of the 301 Representatives, 289 are college graduates. These 291 men represent 35 different vocations, the lawyers naturally leading with 220. There are 17 of these vocations with but one representative each: Naval constructor, stone, nursery, builder, lecturer (Mr. Clark), oils, hatter, steamboat, coal shipper, advertising, fertilizer, gas, towing, undertaking, cattle and teacher. It is natural that the one teacher—Frank B. Willis—should hail from Ohio, the State that never outgrew the New England township idea, and has, therefore, a college for almost every county.

The situation then, is this: But one real teacher, who chose teaching as a profession, has been elected President of the United States, and of the 483 members of the present Congress but one is a teacher.

Now, if Mr. Wilson had spent all those long years in a very gentle way teaching ceramics or phonetics, or German or pedagogy, and had never written anything, no man in his right mind would pretend for a minute that he should be elected President. It is the enviable character of the man, combined with the things that he taught, and the way in which he taught them, plus a long series of excellent books written by him on subjects with which every President should be familiar, that make him in every way eminently eligible for the Presidency.

As to his Presidency of Princeton, suffice it to say that by means of intelligent determination, and with the help of a faculty, the majority of whom believed in him, he transformed Princeton from what it was into an institution of sound learning and waterproof culture. And he was the first layman ever elected to the position. Professor of American history, economics and jurisprudence, and a member of the Presbyterian Church, hence learned in affairs of State and a believer in the church, he became the head of the university.—[New York Times.

CHAPTER IN HEREDITY—ITS CERTAIN EFFECTS

Those who still repeat the dogma that education is everything and inheritance nothing are respectfully requested to read the following much-condensed bit of genealogy:

Back in the beginnings of New England a woman named Elizabeth Tuttle married one Richard Edwards. She was a woman of great beauty and remarkable intellect; but her conduct was too unconventional for the staid Puritan colony. She bore several daughters and one son. Then her husband secured a divorce, and later married again, raising a large family by his second wife.

Here is a partial list of the eminent descendants of Elizabeth Tuttle and Richard Edwards:

Jonathan Edwards.
Jonathan Edwards, Jr., President of Union College.

Timothy Dwight, President of Yale.

Sereno Edwards Dwight, President of Hamilton College.

Timothy Dwight Woolsey, President of Yale.

Timothy Dwight II., President of Yale.

Theodore W. Dwight, founder of Columbia Law School.

Merrill Edwards Gates, President of Amherst.

Aaron Burr.

Ulysses S. Grant.

Grover Cleveland.

On the other hand, not one of the descendants of Richard Edwards by his second wife has risen above mediocrity.

He who can deny heredity in the face of a record like that, has the faith which moves nothing, but halts much.—[Chicago Journal.

WISCONSIN FARMER BOY WHO DISCOVERS COMETS

In an article in the October Woman's Home Companion appears the following:

"A young farmer boy in Wisconsin was so interested in astronomy that he built a telescope himself, ground the lenses himself, and turned out a really serviceable instrument. Not so very far from where this boy lives is the greatest telescope in the world, but every once in a while this country lad, with his crude, home-made telescope, discovers a comet before his neighboring astronomers do. Comets are usually named for the man who discovers them, and so young John Mellish has a number of comets to his credit in the records of astronomy."

Improved Educational Conditions From an Investment Standpoint

By JOHN B. M'FERRAN, Chairman Educational Committee, Louisville Commercial Club

I.

STUDYING the educational situation in the state, I am more and more impressed with the absolute necessity for a radical change in our viewpoint concerning the subject. We have been viewing the schools rather as a necessary evil, an expense to be kept at the minimum of cost. The logical result has been largely attained—cheap houses, cheap grounds, cheap equipment and in too many cases cheap teachers, cheap trustees, cheap county boards and cheap county superintendents.

In fact, so long has this policy prevailed that we have dwarfed everything pertaining to our schools, even our educators, and most of all ourselves, the average citizens. The whole outfit is a cheap and inadequate thing for the twentieth century. OUR SLIPSHOD AND CHAOTIC SYSTEM, IF SYSTEM IT CAN BE CALLED, POSSIBLY ANSWERED FAIRLY WELL THE NEEDS OF FORTY OR FIFTY YEARS AGO, but everything else has moved tremendously within that time and moved with the greatest celerity and momentum.

With our schools here in Kentucky we have practically stood still, trusting to luck or some other mysterious power to supplement our indifference and neglect. Not so with other more prosperous and progressive states, fully recognizing the value and importance of their children. With enlightened zeal and intelligence their tendency has been to crowd all the money into their schools that could be judiciously used, looking upon it as a wise, businesslike proposition, a most profitable investment, and so it has proved, states younger and no more favorably situated, with really inferior natural resources, surpassing us in material wealth two and three fold.

BEFORE WE CAN MAKE THE NEEDED AND DESIRED PROGRESS WE MUST GET THE VIEWPOINT THAT IT IS NOT ONLY OUR HIGH AND HOLY DUTY, BUT MOST PROFITABLE, TO SEE OUR CHILDREN AND THEIR SCHOOLS FROM THE INVESTMENT SIDE AND PROVIDE GENEROUSLY THE FINANCIAL AID THAT IS IMPERATIVELY NEEDED.

Furthermore, we must awaken out of our apathy and see that this money is used to the best advantage and not frittered away by incompetence or graft. We have been furnishing two and a half to three million dollars per annum for our schools for a number of years. What number of citizens have at any time taken the slightest interest to know how this money was being expended? There seems to have been great waste. WE HAVE ALLOWED THE INTEREST OF OUR CHILDREN TO DRIFT INTO POLITICS AND INTO CONFUSION. IT IS HIGH TIME TO CORRECT THIS.

THE OPEN AIR SCHOOLS FOR ANAEMIC CHILDREN

Show Rapid Growth—Increase From One to 200 in Five Years.

With the opening of the fall school term, over 200 open air schools and fresh air classes for tuberculous, and anaemic children, and also for all children in certain rooms and grades, will be in operation in various parts of the United States, according to a statement just published by The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

All of these schools, the association says, have been established since January, 1907, when the first institution of this character was opened in Providence, R. I. On January 1st, 1910, there were only 13 open air schools in this country and a year later the number had increased only to 29. Thus, the real growth in this movement has been within the last two years.

Massachusetts now leads the States with 86 fresh air schools and classes for tuberculous, anaemic and other school children, Boston alone having over eighty. New York comes next with 29, and Ohio is third with 21. Open air schools have now been established in nearly 50 cities in 19 different States.

Based on figures of population and mortality furnished by the United States Bureau of the Census, it is estimated that not less than 100,000 children now in school in the United States will die of tuberculosis before they are eighteen years of age, or that about 7,000 of these children die annually from this one disease. Estimating that on an average each child who dies from tuberculosis has had six years of schooling, the aggregate loss to this country in wasted education each year amounts to well over $1,000,000.

This loss and much of the incident suffering could be materially decreased if open air schools or classes for these children and those who are sickly and anaemic were provided. The National Association estimates that there should be one such school for every 25,000 population, especially in cities.

GIRL INSTANTLY KILLED BY LIGHTNING IN STORM

Brother Was Rendered Unconscious and Burned—Both Seeking Shelter.

The Owensboro Messenger of Wednesday says:

During a heavy electrical storm which swept over Stanley at noon Tuesday, Miss Myrtle Johnson, a sixteen-year-old girl, was instantly killed by a bolt of lightning, and her brother, John Johnson, received severe burns about his face and chest, which will cause him to remain bedfast for several days. The accident occurred on the farm of Dr. Keene, which is several miles from Stanley, on the Laketown road.

The young girl and her brother were working in a tobacco field, when the storm broke in all its fury. The couple started across the field to seek shelter in a barn. When they were within ten yards of the barn, the lightning struck the girl killing her instantly and throwing her brother to the ground in an unconscious condition. One of the mules they had been driving was also killed by the lightning. Farm hands who were in the barn saw the lightning strike the wagon, and rushed to where John Johnson was lying on the ground. He was revived, but when the men picked up the body of his sister, which was badly burned and almost nude, the lightning having torn her clothing to shreds, the brother fell to the ground in a swoon. The body of the dead girl was removed to the home of her parents, who reside on the farm, where preparations were made for burial.

According to the farmers of the Stanley district, the storm was one of the heaviest in years. For twenty minutes hail stones the size of quail eggs fell, doing much damage to the tobacco and corn crops. It is said that many of the crops were ruined by the hail and rain. Following the hail storm, the rain fell in torrents for over an hour.

The October Woman's Home Companion.

The October Woman's Home Companion contains the first installment of a new serial story by Justus Miles Forman, which has to do with the subject, "Votes For Women," and is sure to create considerable discussion. The story is entitled "Through The Open Door," and starts out briskly with the principal character, a young woman of nineteen, discovering herself in a state of revolt against her teacher, who is stand-pat and conservative to the last degree.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, formerly chief of the Bureau of Chemistry in Washington, contributes to the same number of the Companion a remarkably interesting and useful article entitled "Intelligent Eating," full of specific suggestions to everybody. Another notable contribution is entitled "What I Got Out of College," the author being a Wellesley College graduate. "What Children Should Eat," by Dr. Roger H. Dennett, a New York specialist on children's diseases, is also a valuable article.

The regular Cooking, Home Decoration, Household and Fashion Departments are filled with good reading and with ideas that will help women to save time and money in their housekeeping and dress arrangements.

SCURRILOUS ALLEGATION IS PROPERLY REBUKED

Acrimony and recrimination and invective seem more or less inseparable from the three cornered Presidential campaign the country is now undergoing, but it does appear that there should be some limits.

For instance, in an address recently delivered in Columbus, O., Governor Johnson, of California, vice presidential candidate on the ticket of the National Progressive party, declared that, "It is with shame as an American citizen that I say that to-day the most humiliating character in all American history is the President of the United States."

Governor Johnson is a man of many excellent qualities and undoubted achievements. He has wrought well in his own State for advancement and decent government.

But the sort of criticism he leveled at Mr. Taft were much better left unsaid, not only because it is undignified as pertains to the office, but grossly exaggerated as it pertains to the man now occupying it.

We hold no brief, personal or partisan, for Mr. Taft save as we recognize in him a broad and courageous American who has here and there made mistakes at the instigation of ill advised or malicious counselors. In that respect he is by no means singular. But to hold him up as the "most humiliating character in all American history," is to utter a rasping and unfounded generalization which will find little sympathy with lovers of fair play in this country. The annals of America are tolerably well filled with undesirable characters, as is the case with the history of all large and strenuous countries. To set up a comparison between many men of this type that will recur to the average citizen and the honorable and upright man who is now President of the nation, is to perpetrate a grotesque injustice. Unless Governor Johnson is more temperate in his figures of speech he will find he is losing rather than gaining friends for the cause he represents.—[Atlanta Constitution.

OLD LINE REPUBLICAN TALKS

Holds Out for Old Party Principles and Against Roosevelt's Wild Ideas.

TALKS RIGHT OUT IN MEETING

Rosine, Ky., Sept. 20, 1912.

Editors Herald, Hartford, Ky. Dear Sirs:—It gives me great pain to ask to borrow from you that which ought to be given by others, but after having been once turned down by what ought to be my party paper—the Hartford Republican—then I will ask space in your paper for the purpose of giving vent to my feelings. After consulting the voters of Rosine and other voting precincts, I, with others, denounce the declaration signed and reasons for so doing of the 17 district committeemen of various voting precincts of Ohio county. We do not blame any one for not seeing as we see, neither do we find fault with them for not voting as we do, but we do blame them for being so radical in words and actions and in the denunciation of the Republican party and W. H. Taft's administration. We further believe Theodore Roosevelt has been one of our greatest statesmen for both the rich and poor, but we denounce his present precedent as being dangerous to the American people, both financially and politically.

We further believe if Theodore Roosevelt had not become a political bolter he could have had the nomination in 1916 for President in the Republican party without opposition. But we believe him to be like many others in letting his political opinion for fame far exceed his judgment, and it has cast a gloom over his past record and so blighted his future usefulness that he will go down in history as many another once good and useful man—unregretted and not worthy of even an imprint on our minds.

Even our grandchildren will ask: "Who was the first Republican to rebel and split the Republican party and cause a defeat?" The answer will be "Theodore Roosevelt." "And for what cause?" Answer: "To excel George Washington and do what U. S. Grant could not do." Now, who paid him for all this, the common people, or such as Perkins, Hines and the Standard Oil Company?

Now if we believed for a moment all these little sucklings that are squealing, shouting, dancing and bellowing and using such utterances as T. R. says, such as "Steam Roller Bosses," "Trusts," "Big Business" and "Common People," was not a pretense and a bait for suckers, we might shut our eyes and swallow it. But not believing the American people ought to be too quick to act, I for one think it is best to let T. R. have 4 years to solve his problem and to give the people a chance to study his wildcat schemes and theories.

I am fearful the new-born baby party will prove to be a bastard, conceived in sin and born in iniquity. Its adopted father T. R. will in due time denounce its origin, if it does not always concede that he is the great "I AM." And when his bugle sounds, his followers must become alarmed, forsake father, mother and all other kindred and follow him. And when they fail to rally, T. R. will cause the earth to quake and a great upheaval. Then T. R. will open wide his mouth and do as he tried to do at the National Convention at Chicago—swallow and digest the Republican party in 39 days.

Now the party emblem or device is all O. K. Some still want to cling to the log cabin, other T. R.'s picture. Now, if I was a Bull Mosser, I would want the picture of a weasel as my party emblem, so its face front would attract more attention than its hinder parts. Now this is a campaign for fun and that's all us poor devils will get out of it. PELODY CROWDER.

Few, if any, medicines, have met with the uniform success that has attended the use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. The remarkable cures of colic and diarrhoea which it has effected in almost every neighborhood have given it a wide reputation. For sale by all dealers.

SAYS SHE BEHELD HEAVENLY HOST

And Was Instantly Restored to Health.

WAS SAVED AS IF BY MIRACLE

Wonderful Recovery of a Girl
Who Was Fearfully Afflicted.

IS CERTAINLY STRANGE CASE

"An angel from heaven met me at the gates of death and brought me back."

So, reverently, says Miss Dorothy Kerin.

"A miracle!" cry some of those who know of her marvelous restoration to health at the very moment when it seemed she was about to succumb to tuberculosis and diabetes. Miss Kerin, twenty-two years old, had been a helpless invalid for six years. Her emergence from illness and pain, suddenly and without either physical or psychic assistance from any one, or from any method of healing, has excited the profoundest interest of the religious and the scientific.

Not less remarkable than the restoration of her physical health is the effect her inexplicable experience has had on her mind. Now
she has a clarity of view and a precise faith in an infinite power and of a belief in a spiritual law, but she has a clarity of view and a precise and eloquence of expression which, usually, are acquired only by years of diligent study.

Miss Kerin, a beautiful girl with dark, flowing hair and large, lustrous eyes, lives at 204 Milkwood Road, London. For five years past and until only recently, she had not stood upright. For a fortnight she had been unconscious and delirious. That Sunday morning her physician, Dr. Norman, an eminent practitioner, told her sorrowing parents that Miss Kerin had only a few hours to live. He was the last of twenty-seven doctors who had exhausted their skill in the effort to prolong her life.

Let her mother tell what happened; that which appears to be miraculous:

"We did not think Dorothy would live until sunset. As dusk fell we gathered around her bed, fearing she would leave us any minute.
Suddenly she gave a great sigh, and we thought she was gone. But, with a wonderful smile, which none of us will ever forget, she stretched out her arms and held them up a few minutes.

"Then she lay still. Presently, with that wonderful smile, her lips moving, she drew her hands over her eyes, then raised her hands.

"And then we saw a miracle performed.

"She looked at me, her eyes expanding.

"Dolly, do you know me?" I asked.

"Of course, I do, mamma," she said. She sat up and exclaimed, "I am to get up." She seemed under some mysterious influence. "You can't get up, my darling," said I.
But she did get up. "The angel told me to," she said, simply. She was the calmest person in the room.

"One of our friends who was there—an honorable man, but who professes atheism—at the sight of her, fell on his knees, sobbing and praying to Almighty God.

"Next morning Dorothy, laughing, was running up and down stairs," Mrs. Kerin continued. "She said to a visitor who had come to console with us, 'I was conscious yesterday for the first time in several days. It seemed to me that I was slipping out of life. I heard the whispers and sobs and prayers of those who love me best. Everything grew black. I did not even think; I just drifted without an effort, without a thought, into deeper blackness.

"Suddenly I saw a light—dazzling—brighter than any fire I had ever seen and stretched from out the great golden flame I saw two hands. Then I heard a sweet voice say clearly, 'Dorothy, your sufferings are over. Arise. You can walk.' Then I heard mother asking me if I knew her."—[London

"I" STRUCK AT UTICA
AT DEPTH OF 110 FEET

The Owensboro Inquirer says:
Mr. Wesley Riddle, of the Utica neighborhood, has "struck it." Mr.
Riddle had a well on his farm to afford a water supply. It was 85 feet deep, but did not afford as much water, at all times, as he needed, and he decided to go deeper, in an effort to find a lower and stronger vein. When the depth of 110 feet had been reached, a free flowing vein was tapped, but the water smelled and tasted like coal oil. The well filled to within 25 feet of the top, and it is not filling with water, but crude petroleum.

Several oil right options have been taken on lands in the Utica neighborhood, and Mr. Riddle's well indicates that they may at some time in the future, prove to be of great value to those who hold them.

DON'T EAT MORE THAN ONE PER CENT OF WEIGHT A DAY

Harvey W. Wiley, formerly chief of the United States Bureau of Chemistry, writes an interesting article entitled "Intelligent Eating," in the October Woman's Home Companion. He says in part:

"Every pound of useless fat which the human being carries is an impediment to proper activity. A man six feet tall should weigh approximately two hundred pounds.
If by strict attention to his diet and exercise he can reduce this weight to 190 or 185 pounds, it would probably prove beneficial, but if his weight is allowed to rise to 210, 220, 230, or even 240 pounds, he unfits himself to that extent for his duties.

"Let anyone who is accustomed to physical exercise, and suited thereto, climb a long steep hill. If his weight is normal and his health good, he can do this without any very great fatigue; let him then begin at the foot of the hill and carry a weight of forty pounds, and note the effect that this will have. The man who weighs forty pounds more than he should—and there are thousands of them in this land of ours—is forced constantly to carry this quite unnecessary handicap.

"Food for special activities, or special public or private duties, is a matter which has not received any very great scientific attention.
No set amount of food can be arbitrarily chosen for the brain-worker or other professional man.
In general it may be said that a man of little exercise will eat less than one per cent. of his weight of dry food per day. Any marked excess of food, or excessively starchy or sugary food, must also be avoided by the man and woman of sedentary habits."

T. L. Parks, Murrayville, Ga., Route 1, is in his 73d year, and like the majority of elderly people, he suffered with kidney trouble and bladder weakness and urinary irregularities. He says: "I have suffered with my kidneys. My back ached and I was annoyed with bladder irregularities. I can truthfully say, one 50c bottle of Foley Kidney Pills cured me entirely." They contain no habit-forming drugs. For

ELECTRICAL FENCE A NEW ONE

In the Way of Trickery and Answered Its Purpose
Most Splendidly.

ART OF TAMING FARM HANDS

"The Japanese have always had a predilection for electricity," said Dr. Nitobe, a professor of the University of Tokyo, while visiting Washington recently. "I recall a striking instance of their application of it more than fifteen years ago that was as unique as it was effective.

"In the early nineties the Japanese defeated the Chinese in war and in the indemnity the Japanese acquired the large island of Formosa, lying off the coast of China.

"Now while the lower part of Formosa is very fertile, and grows the finest tea and rice, being civilized as well, the upper portion, indeed by far the largest part of the island, was overrun by the blood-thirstiest of savages, who considered murder and robbery as the only gentle professions. They had been accustomed, under Chinese rule, which was no rule at all, to make descents upon the few peaceful farmers in the lower end about the time their crops were ripe, and, after killing enough of them to satisfy their lust for blood, carry away to their mountain wildernesses enough rice and tea to last them until time for another incursion.

"When the Japanese took possession and saw this state of affairs, they sent a strong military force to Formosa, and drove these savage barbarians far up into the northern end of the island. Then they brought in a host of immigrants from Japan who speedily cleared the wilderness, which was dripping with fertility, and planted their crops—but not before the Japanese authorities had stretched across the island, 300 miles from ocean to ocean, along the line between them and the savages, a simple wire fence; that was all.

There was a barbed wire on top
and a barbed wire at the bottom, and right between ran an innocent-looking smooth wire of the telephone type.

"Pretty soon the savage natives,
having found that the Japanese soldiers had gone, started to make one of their customary raids upon the crops lying so temptingly beyond the fence. They got together with their war clubs and other such grisly weapons and, starting on their bloody excursion, reached the harmless-looking fence and commenced to clamber through—when the Japanese engineers who manned the powerful electric generators connected to that particular section of the fence, turned on several thousand—or million volts it was, maybe—along that innocent middle wire. That was all, but it was enough: as soon as a painted chief took hold of it to get through, he dropped like a log, and so did those who tried to follow him. I am told that our people at the electric plants never stirred when they heard the wild shrieks that arose, but merely shoved in more coal and turned on more 'juice.' I believe you call it. The next day when a party went up to investigate they found the savages strung along the fence like so many dead cattle.

"The natives made one or two attempts, further, with like results.
Then when they found they were starving, as well as cursed by some powerful god within the magic wire, they came in and, laying down their arms, surrendered. They say they make the best farm hands in Formosa now—but they've never comprehended the mystery of the middle wire."—[Popular Electricity.

HIS FEATHERED BREAD
—A STORY OF BEECHER

There is always a charm in meeting and talking with men who knew in life such celebrities as Henry Ward Beecher. A friend recently related how, in the early days while preaching in Indiana, he and Beecher stopped at a farmhouse. For the evening meal the good wife served the young minister with fried chicken and corn bread. When Beecher opened the corn bread he found two pin-feathers inside.

"This bread," he remarked with one of his genial smiles, "seems to be feathering out."

"I have just been telling Jim," murmured the housewife apologetically, "that he had better make a cover for the meal barrel or find a new roosting place for the chickens."

Young Beecher carefully picked out the feathers and ate the corn bread, and with a hearty laugh characteristic of his career, calmly proceeded to finish his meal. This was but one of the many incidents related by his old acquaintance, who had the rare privilege of companionship with the famous Connecticut preacher.—[Affairs and

"Any of the fall grapes may be packing the grapes in layers in a DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

For President---Gov. Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey.
For Vice President---Gov. Thos. R. Marshall, of Indiana.
For Congress, Fourth District---Hon. Ben Johnson, of Bardstown.

Present indications are that the wild oats crop will afford an excellent yield in these parts.

They talk about the recall of Judges and other officials, but why can't we have the recall of candidates?

It has been suggested that Mr. Taft would make a good alderman in Cincinnati. We're inclined to endorse him for the place.

Mr. Green R. Keller, for years editor of the Carlisle Mercury, laid down his pencil last week to answer the final summons. Mr. Keller was one of Kentucky's most brilliant journalists and will be greatly missed.

Dr. Wiley, the erstwhile Government expert, says we ought to always be merciful to animals. But the genial Doc seems to forget all about this when he roams the political forest and takes a crack at the chief bull moose.

Thousands of progressive Republicans will vote for Woodrow Wilson this year as the surest and safest way out of a political muddle. They know that a vote for Wilson will mean a vote for good government in every sense of the word, while it relieves them from taking part in their own party mess.

There is such a thing as being "too much of a good thing." This seems to be what has overtaken Mr. Roosevelt. He is too "progressive" in his ideas, and the level-headed, conservative element of his party are against him. They are afraid of him---afraid of his radical views and rashly radical action. And the vaingloriousness of the man is another of his many drawbacks.

That ghost story which bobs up once in awhile about Democrats going to vote for Teddy is about like the one of a year ago, when it was said that great masses of Democrats would vote for Judge O'Rear. When the count was made it was found that O'Rear didn't even poll the full strength of his party and the Democrats that voted for him could be easily crowded on a very small seat.

There are incidents multiplying every day which indicate that the Republican vote in Ohio county---between Roosevelt and Taft---will be pretty equally divided. There has been some big hurrahing for Teddy, but the "Progressive" convention amounted to but little in numbers and enthusiasm, and the great bulk of the party seem to be thinking more than talking. The Taft fellows seem to have a pretty good organization.

We simply do not care a continental which gets the most votes in Ohio county, the State or the Nation, as pertains to Messrs. Roosevelt and Taft. We do not believe it is a one-sided affair, however, as is alleged by the Roosevelt fellows. We believe it will be a pretty even split-up between the two factions. From what we have noticed lately we believe the Taft crowd is gaining in numbers, many Republicans deciding to stay with the old organization. Let 'em scrap while Wilson wins.

The Herald has been accused of espousing the cause of the Taft fellows, the source of the accusation being merely the malicious spite work of a local contemporary, which of all living specimens, should have the least to say about alleged bolters, judging from its past inconsistent record. As a matter of fact, the voters of Ohio county would hear little about the doings of the Taft fellows but for The Herald, which is willing to stand false accusations in order to print the news.

HOW LOCAL JOURNAL HAS DEPARTED FROM FAITH

This paper believes in Republican principles of the old time kind and is always willing to do anything, fair and honorable, to promote those principles, but it will not follow a minority, especially when the teachings of that minority are adverse to the principles heretofore taught, and which, if followed, can only lead to utter destruction for the party. [From the Hartford Republican August 12, 1910.]

Stimulate Children?

Ask your doctor how often he prescribes an alcoholic stimulant for children. He will probably say, "Very, very rarely." Ask him how often he prescribes a tonic for them. He will probably answer, "Very, very frequently." Then ask him about Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a strong and safe tonic for the young. Not a drop of alcohol in it.

Always keep a box of Ayer's Pills in the house. Just one pill at bedtime, now and then, will ward off many an attack of biliousness, indigestion, sick-headache. How many years has your doctor known these pills? Ask him all about them.

TAFT IS A DEAD COCK IN THE PIT, SAYS TEDDY

Theft of Nomination is Worse Than the Theft of a Purse.

Hastings, Neb., Sept. 21.---Criticism of Republican leaders in general and Victor Rosewater, of Omaha, former Republican National Committeeman, in particular, Col. Roosevelt opened his campaign in Nebraska to-day. He said, in part: "In this district or in any other district the only way in which Republicans can show themselves true to Abraham Lincoln is to support the Progressive party."

"Penrose, Barnes and your own Victor Rosewater were engaged at the Chicago convention in scuttling the Republican ship. They cared nothing for the principles of the party. All they wanted was to keep the power for their own purposes, and if they could not keep it without ruining the party, they were glad to ruin the party."

"The bosses know that Mr. Taft is a dead cock in the pit, and are turning to Mr. Wilson. I will admit that the bosses don't like me. What's more, I will make them not like me some more."

"We Progressives intend to see that in our party every promise made by a public man is kept."

Worse Than Theft of a Purse. Fairmont, Neb., Sept. 21.---Gov. Aldrich and Representative George Norris boarded Col. Roosevelt's train here.

At Sutton the Colonel renewed his attack on Mr. Rosewater.

"We want to cast our own votes and not have Mr. Victor Rosewater cast them for us," he said. "I came out here in the primaries and fought fair and square. We carried Nebraska and Mr. Rosewater cast the vote of Nebraska against us. In Chicago Mr. Rosewater allowed the ninety contested delegates to vote on each other's rights to seats."

"How long would you have criminals left in a penitentiary if you allowed them to vote on each other's rights to go free? The criminals in the penitentiary are no worse characters than Mr. Rosewater and his allies, for the theft of a nomination is worse than the theft of a purse."

ANOTHER TOBACCO TRUST

---A $50,000,000 CONCERN

New York, Sept. 23.---The formation of a $50,000,000 tobacco company was announced to-day. The leaders in the organization are Daniel G. Reid and prominent members of the Morgan group of financiers.

The company, which will be known as the Tobacco corporation, has been in process of formation for some time and is said to have been conceived as a result of the Supreme Court's decision against the American Tobacco Company. It will devote its attention to the manufacturing end of the business and will sell to the United Cigar Stores Company. It is understood that all the organizers of the new company are friendly to the American Tobacco Company.

Many independent factories have been acquired by the new concern and there are rumors in Wall street that it has been formed to stifle the competition resulting from the decision of the Supreme Court. The capital stock of the company will be divided thus:

Common, $30,000,000; preferred, $20,000,000.

POWERHOUSE BURNED AT McHENRY MINES

Fire that is supposed to have caught from a crossed wire, destroyed the powerhouse, boilers, engines and all machinery in the building at McHenry about 5 o'clock last Thursday morning, entailing a loss of several thousand dollars. We were unable to ascertain the amount of the loss or amount of insurance. Preparations are being made to rebuild and equip the power house at once.

The management hope to have the work of rebuilding and equipping the powerhouse advanced far enough that power can be furnished to run the new mines by the first of October. In the meantime sufficient power is being used from the Williams Coal Co.'s power plant to run the pumps at the new mines.

The management have not yet fully decided as to whether the tipples at the old mines will be rebuilt or not. It is the general impression, if rebuilt, it will be placed south of the old site and a switch or branch line run out to it, as the haul is now something like three miles.

W. A. Wallace Dead.

He was seventy years old and a Federal soldier in the Civil War.

A Periodical Tippler.

A doctor's patient in Excelsior Springs the other day was answering the usual list of queries prior to entering upon a course of treatment.

"Are you a steady or a periodical drinker?" asked the physician. "Periodical," was the reply.

"How long between periods?" The poor fellow studied a moment, that he might answer correctly, and replied:

"About 20 minutes." [Kansas City Star.]

LUCKY ALFRED NOW AWAITING

Two Big Events in His Quiet Life.

BABE AND ALSO VAST FORTUNE

Are Soon to Come Into His Possession, At Age of Thirty-five.

HE WILL INHERIT $50,000,000

New York, Sept. 20.—Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, suzerain of the much moneyed house by virtue of his father's will nullifying the usual operation of primogeniture, is keenly awaiting two events. The first, one that will bind him more closely to his charming bride, who was Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim, is expected almost hourly. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt are quartered in their houseboat on the Thames in London awaiting the birth of the expected heir.

As soon after the birth of the child as the young mother's condition permits, Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt will take passage for America, where, on October 20, the former will celebrate his thirty-fifth birthday anniversary. On this day the young man will take rank with the real financial giants of America. On this day he will automatically come into possession of a sum estimated conservatively at $25,000,000.

This huge sum represents the half of Vanderbilt's patrimony will be him by his father, Cornelius Vanderbilt. The seventeenth provision of the remarkable document, in which the then head of the family of American millionaires cut off his eldest son, Cornelius, Jr., with a paltry $1,500,000, reads as follows: "Seventeenth—All the rest, residue and remainder of the estate, including all lapsed legacies and the principal of annuities, is given to the executors in trust to hold and invest and reinvest and collect rents, incomes and profits for the use of his son, Alfred G., and to pay to him the net income as received until he becomes 30, when he is to come into possession of one half of said estate, the income of the balance to be paid to him as before until he becomes 35, when he is to come into full possession thereof."

October 20, 1912, he will be complete and outright master of $50,000,000, together with his surplus income, which is estimated at several millions more. Thus this smooth-faced, soft-voiced young American will possess a fortune approximating that of the Phippses, the Moores, the Reids, the Goulds and the Archbalds, whose fortunes range from $50,000,000 to $150,000,000.

Mr. Vanderbilt's fortune, however, can hardly be placed in the "stupendous" class.

Warning Cards.

The Kentucky law lately passed in regard to the abolishment of the public drinking cup, requires that all stores, hotels, boarding houses, depots and other public places where drinking water is usually kept, shall keep a large card, with the law printed thereon, posted close by said drinking water. The Herald is prepared to furnish these cards at ten cents apiece, by mail or by hand. Better keep within the bounds of the law.

The Power of Niagara.

The energy from Niagara Falls, including operation on both sides of the falls, is used at the rate of 126,000 horse power for electro-chemical process, 56,200 horse power for railway mail service, 36,400 horse power for lighting, and 54,500 horse power for various industrial services, the total being 273,140 horse power. Since the water of Niagara Falls represents probably

5,000,000 horse power, it would seem that only about 5.5 per cent of available power is being utilized at present.—[Electrical News.]

TITHES.

Judge J. B. Hobson is Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky. For years he has been an elder in the Presbyterian church. He is a tither. Soon after he was known to be a tither a severe test was put upon him by the reception of a very large fee (the largest he or any other lawyer in that community ever received) from a long continued, almost hopeless suit against a large corporation. Much comment was aroused; some predicted that the big fee would not be tithed like the little ones. It was tithed, however, being generously divided between his own and several other churches.

Judge Hobson once said: "The reason that most people do not tithe is that they believe they can not afford to do it. It is with the greatest difficulty they get along as it is, and they do not see how they can spare a tenth. Many years ago, when my income was small and I had become involved in debt, it seemed to me I could pay nothing for the support of the church until my obligations were met, but my wife said this would not do. So after talking the matter over we concluded to try tithing. The tenth of all I made was laid aside and put in a jar. To our surprise, all demands were met, the jar was never empty, the fund grew. We did not miss the tenth. Since then I have always tithed and am persuaded that if people would practice tithing, few christians, after trying it faithfully, would be willing to deny themselves the privilege."

His experience is that of thousands of tithers in the land, who have found it to be a grace, "freely to give."—[Christian Advocate.]

Many Driven From Home.

Every year, in many parts of the country, thousands are driven from their homes by coughs and lung diseases. Friends and business are left behind for other climates, but this is costly and not always sure. A better way—the way of multitudes—is to use Dr. King's New Discovery and cure yourself at home. Stay right there, with your friends, and take this safe medicine. Throat and lung troubles find quick relief and health returns. Its help in coughs, colds, grip, croup, whooping cough and sore lungs make it a positive blessing. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by James H. Williams.

JUST ONE POLICEMAN IN ICELAND—A SECRET

Iceland has no jails, no penitentiary; there is no court and only one policeman. Not a drop of alcoholic liquor is made on the island. Its 78,000 people are total abstainers, since they will not permit any liquor to be imported.

There is not an illiterate person on the island, nor a child 10 years old unable to read; the system of public schools is practically perfect. Much of the improvement is due to the abolition of the liquor traffic and prohibition of all alcoholic beverages in this compact little island of the north.

Investigation proves it true. Below is a statement of a Hartford resident. No stronger proof of merit can be had.

S. L. King, Hartford, Ky., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills a good remedy for kidney complaint, as they have benefited me whenever I have had occasion to take them. One Way to Reduce High Living Cost

Is to build a home and then settle down to a contented life and make up your mind to pay for it. A little garden at the back of the house will work wonders in reducing your living costs—a few chickens will also help. Can't do these things when you're renting because you lack inspiration and either a garden or chickens must have careful attention. If you build a frame house you can start with only a few rooms and add onto it when the family grows, and by the time your sons and daughters are large enough to take notice you will have a home respectable enough in size and appearance to make them feel pretty proud of "Mommer and Daddy." When you are ready for lumber we want to talk to you and help you off right.

A Story for Labor Day Showing a New Way of Ending a Strike

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"I'm sorry, miss, to have to tell you that I'm going to leave you."

A girl of twenty, whose red and white complexion bespoke Irish blood stood before her mistress, fingering her apron with evident embarrassment.

"Why, Maggie, what have I done?"

"Nothing, miss."

"Then why are you going to leave me?"

"Well, miss—the truth is—why, miss—I'm going to be married."

"Oh, I see. Who are you going to marry, Maggie?"

"Jim Doolan, that works in the Ainsworth factory."

"The Ainsworth factory?"

"Yes, miss."

Margaret Etheridge, the girl's mistress, was interested in the Ainsworth company as a stockholder and through its president and manager, Richard Ainsworth.

"I'm sorry to lose you, Maggie," said Miss Etheridge, "but if you are going to be married, you can depend upon me to give you whatever you will need in the way of clothes, household linen and other things, to enable you to set up housekeeping."

"Thank you, miss."

Maggie was married and went to live with her husband in a small suit of rooms. Jim's wages were not very large, but the couple made them do very well till the first child came, when they were obliged to take a backward step financially by incurring a considerable bill for medical attendance. Then Jim was taken sick, and that increased the indebtedness.

Meanwhile Richard Ainsworth had been pressing an unsuccessful suit with Miss Etheridge. He had greatly increased the output of the Ainsworth company since he took the management, and to the book value of the stock 50 per cent had been added. Indeed, Richard Ainsworth had come to be considered one of the smartest young business men in the state. But there were differences between him and Margaret Etheridge that prevented her from accepting him. Those business qualifications for which the world applauded him did not appeal to her. She did not understand the methods by which that silent partner, capital, was made to absorb the lion's share of the profits of a business. She saw the operatives—men, women and children—going to the works early in the morning and, having worked hard all day, return in the evening to their shabby homes to repeat the process day after day. They were working to pay dividends on her stock, while she, who did nothing, lived in affluence. It seemed to her that there was something wrong. She appealed to Richard Ainsworth for an explanation, but his explanations were not satisfactory. His reasons convinced her, but her heart, her sense of justice, were unmoved by them.

"Why can't you pay your operatives enough to enable them to live more comfortably?" she asked Mr. Ainsworth.

"Because of competition."

"Explain."

"Other concerns would be able to undersell and we would be forced out of business."

"Why not appropriate a portion of the dividends, which are enormous, to the operatives?"

"Because of several reasons, the most pertinent of which is that the stockholders would object."

"I am a stockholder. You may cut my dividends in half, giving one half to the operatives."

"You are one among hundreds; the rest, instead of being willing to give up their profits, are howling for more. My dear Margaret, you don't understand such things."

"Does anybody understand them?"

"Yes, one—Providence."

One day Maggie Doolan sent a pitiful message to Margaret, scrawled in pencil on a bit of paper, saying that she was ill, her husband was away at his work all day, the children had no one to take care of them, and Jim's wages were pledged for debts. Besides this, there was nothing to eat in the house. Margaret immediately sallied forth with a well filled purse and, stopping at the provision shops by the way, carried comfort to the distressed. As she was coming away, Jim came in with a rueful countenance and, throwing himself into a chair, dropped his head in his arms on a table.

"What is it, Jim?" asked his wife in a frightened tone.

"The strike is on," was the mournful reply.

"Oh, heavens!" cried Maggie in dismay.

"What are the hands striking for?" asked Margaret Etheridge.

"Ten per cent advance all around."

"And do you mean that you will have no income whatever till the matter is settled?"

"I do."

"How much do you earn?"

"Twenty-one dollars a week."

"Very well. Every weekly pay day I will send you a check for that amount."

Margaret left, leaving a relieved and thankful household behind her.

The strike proved to be a prolonged one. One evening while it was in progress Richard Ainsworth and Margaret Etheridge were sitting in her home discussing the matter.

"Why do you not give the men what they demand?" she asked.

"For a number of reasons—first, if I do within six months they will make another demand, and so on until we pay them so much that we can't manufacture at a profit. This will drive us out of business and them out of employment."

"Why can't a compromise be effected?"

"The question is a difficult one to answer. If these men were represented by one of their own number a compromise might be effected. But they are represented by one or more persons whose interest I don't consider their interest. The questions between the laborer and the capitalist are those constantly arising between partners in business. Whenever the interests of persons and peoples are intertwined there can only be loss to both in a want of harmony. When the capitalist is unjust to the laborer he in the long run injures his business. When the laborer is excessive in his demands upon the capitalist he injures the business in which he is a partner."

Ainsworth had scarcely spoken the last word when there was evidence of a commotion without. Some one cried: "Hurrah for the strike sympathizer!"

Ainsworth and Margaret looked at each other wonderingly.

"Where's the leddy? Come out!"

There was a ring at the door bell. Margaret chose to answer the summons herself. A workman stood at the door, who, pulling respectfully the rim of his tattered hat, said to her:

"There's a lot of us here, miss, that hearin' ye have contributed to the strikers' fund by paying Jim Doolan's family his weekly wages, have come to thank ye. Would ye mind showin' yourself on the porch?"

Margaret went out and saw a crowd of upturned faces, lighted only by a street lamp.

"Three cheers for the leddy strike sympathizer!" cried the man who had brought her out.

The cheers were given with a will, and when quiet was restored Margaret said:

"I can't say exactly that I am a strike sympathizer, but I can say that I am a sympathizer with you and your families. I am a stockholder in the Ainsworth company, and if by throwing off all my dividends except what I need to keep body and soul together I could end this strike I would do so."

"Good for you!" "Let the other stockholders do the same!" "For God's sake, end it!"

"How would you like to make me your representative to confer in your name with the management of the Ainsworth company with a view to a compromise?"

"Bully!" "Go ahead!" "Do it!"

Margaret's introducer held up his hand for silence and said:

"All in favor of Miss Etheridge representing us say aye."

There was a wild shout of ayes. No noes were called for or given.

"Very well," said Margaret. "Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock I will be ready to receive a committee of men who are workers, men who have been supporting their families by their labor in the works of the Ainsworth company. Don't send any one else. If you do I shall decline to act for you."

She withdrew, followed by wild shouts from laborers delighted with the novel plan of endeavoring to secure their demands through a stockholder and a woman. In ten minutes more the neighborhood was deserted.

The next morning Richard Ainsworth was at Margaret's home some time before the appearance of the committee and was shown into a room by himself, ready to decide upon any proposition that might be made. When the committee arrived they were placed in the drawing room. Margaret entered and said:

"Make your demand."

"Our only demand," replied the spokesman, "is for 10 per cent advance."

"If the raise is granted, how long before a demand will be made for another raise?"

The committee conferred and finally agreed to pledge themselves that no new demand should be made within two years.

"How is the management of the company to be assured that you will keep this pledge?"

After another consultation the spokesman said, "Every operative will sign a written pledge to you, and you can give your word to the management."

"Very well. Wait here."

Withdrawing, Margaret went into the room occupied by the manager and made him the proposition.

Now Richard Ainsworth had a shrewd head in more ways than one. He could see an opportunity when it presented itself, and he saw one now.

"Margaret," he said, "the terms are accepted on one condition."

"What is it?"

"That you make an additional pledge."

"What pledge?"

"To become my wife."

Margaret was not ready to give a definite answer. She tried to satisfy him with an evasion. All to no purpose. He stood firm as a rock. Either the stipulation must be introduced into the agreement or the strike must go on. Finally she put out her hand and turned away her face. Ainsworth took the hand and sealed the contract with a kiss.

That night there was a demonstration about Margaret Etheridge's home, and nothing would satisfy the demonstrators except carrying their representatives in a chair on their shoulders around the factory and home again.

TALES OF SPOOKS

The Deputy Death Sent to the Second Lord Lyttleton.

WARNED HIM AND VANISHED.

And Just When He Thought He Had "Jockeyed the Ghost" the Prediction Became a Fact—Story of a Specter Dog and the Legend of Lady Howard.

Belief in specters, phantoms and apparitions still lingers in many parts of England. We scoff at ghost stories as stuff that is "considered ridiculous by all persons of sound education and common sense," and yet mixed in with the legends of wraiths and hellhounds are some true tales that are hard to explain from the standpoint of natural cause and effect.

A strange story is that told of the notorious second Lord Lyttleton, who is said to have been as evil as his father was the reverse. He died when in his prime under the following well attested circumstances: A few days before his death Lord Lyttleton saw enter his room a woman who told him that on the third day after her appearance he would die. He was very much frightened and extremely depressed by the occurrence, but on the morning of the third day his fears had abated somewhat, and he had to breakfast with him a party which included Lady Flood, Lord Fortescue and two of the Misses Amphlett, to whom he said, "If I live over tonight I shall have jockeyed the ghost, for this is the third day." In the forenoon the party set out to Pitt Place, Lord Lyttleton's country seat near Epsom, and were not long arrived when his lordship had a suffocating fit, but recovered sufficiently to dine with his friends at 5 o'clock.

By what is described as "a friendly trick" the watches and clocks throughout the house were advanced half an hour. The evening passed, and Lord Lyttleton's spirits recovered their usual buoyancy. At half past 11 he retired, and, according to his valet's report, "he kept every now and then looking at his watch. . . . Within a minute or two of 12 by his watch he asked to look at mine. . . . His lordship then put both to his ear to make certain that they went. When it was near the real hour of 12 he said: 'Come! I'll wait no longer. Get me my medicine. I'll take it and try to sleep.' It appears that the valet stirred the draft with a toothpick, and this angered Lord Lyttleton, who sent him for a spoon. When the man returned he found his master in a fit. Instead of attempting to relieve him he ran for help, and when he returned with the alarmed guests Lord Lyttleton was dead.

A peculiar class of apparition in which many persons believed is that of specter dogs, which are again divided into three kinds: (1) Black dogs that are fiends in disguise; (2) evil spirits that hunt souls in this guise; (3) spirits of the wicked departed made to take this shape for their sins. These black dogs are of all sorts and sizes, big dogs and little dogs, long haired dogs and short haired dogs, meek dogs and fierce dogs, but as a rule the standard specter hound is huge, most ferocious looking and shaggy like a wolf, and, we are told, packs of these hellhounds have been seen, sometimes hunted by a huntsman whose description much resembles the popular conception of the devil.

A famous story is told of a goblin hound which used to inhabit an old mansion at Lyme Regis, in Dorset, that had been partly demolished and turned into a farmhouse, in which lived an old drunken farmer. Having been urged to drive out the black dog by his companions, he seized the poker and rushed at the dog, which sprang up instantly and rushed upstairs, followed by the tipsy farmer. It fled into an attic and, hey presto, jumped clean through the ceiling. The angry farmer struck at the place, when, to his amazement, down fell from the hole he had made an old fashioned money box, which proved to be full of gold and silver coins of the reign of Charles I. The dog was never again seen in the house, but it is said to haunt a lane which leads to it, where it can be seen at midnight and which bears the name of "Dog lane," while a local inn displays the sign "The Black Dog Inn."

Lady Howard, who lived in the reign of the first James and was as famous for her wit as for her beauty and her wealth, was also possessed of a good many bad qualities. She had four husbands, whom she killed off rather rapidly, and was very cruel to her only daughter. For her sins she was transformed when she died—so the story runs—into a black dog, and at midnight she runs between Fitzford, her one time residence, and Oakhampton park in order to carry to the place from which she started a single blade of grass. This she is doomed to do until she has removed every blade of grass from the park.—London Globe.

Mrs. Green—I tell you it's nice to have a husband who isn't afraid to praise you up to people. Why, only yesterday I heard Charley telling Mrs. Jones that I was getting to be a regular Xantippe.

Mrs. Green—Oh, yes; I told Charley I'd overheard him, and he explained that Xantippe was the goddess of youth and beauty.—Boston Transcript.

God Bless Our Wives.

One of the best known lawyers in Cleveland attended a banquet of his fraternity the other night and responded to the toast, "Our Wives." On this classic and congenial theme he expanded and fairly glowed. But even after his eloquence fades from the memories of those present one personal note will remain. He said in part:

"God bless our wives. They know us from alpha to omega, our secret faults and virtues. But they rise in arms against him who would expose the former or belittle the latter. How well I remember an occasion upon which my own dear wife had me paged in a restaurant where I was eating. She said to the waiter, 'Is Mr. Dashblank here?' 'Is he that fat old man with a red nose and bald head?'"

"Yes, that's the man," answered my wife. "But I want you to understand that he isn't fat and he isn't old. And he's not very bald, either. I shall report you for your insolence. His nose isn't a bit red. Get him for me at once. You evidently know him."

"God bless our wives."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Two Ways Hath Life.

Two ways hath life. One as a stream With flowers environ'd quits the source, The even tenor of its course, Hardly betrayed by transient gleam. No echo marks the onward roll Of waves that without plaint or sigh, Winning scant glance from passerby, Unhasting reach the appointed goal.

One as a torrent unconfined Bursts forth heading with frenzied will, No agency its rage can still, Nor barriers curb, nor forces bind. The first achieves, the second aims: One limits hath, the other none, With every day its task begun—Patience, ambition, are their names.

—Alfred de Musset.

Jogged His Memory.

Here is the story of an actual experience in buying socks in London: A wealthy but peppery American went into an expensive Bond street haberdasher's the other day, and when he stated his object the clerk carefully measured the visitor's right foot, and the purchase was made. On his way out the visitor's attention was caught by some hosiery near the door. To the clerk, who was obsequiously following him out, he said, "I'll take a pair of those too."

"Yes, sir," said the clerk. "What size do you wear, sir?"

"Why, you pinheaded ass," reminded the other, "do you think my foot has grown since you measured it?"

Then the clerk remembered.—New York Sun.

Bungled It, After All.

Here's one of Will Irwin's stories, told in that quiet, drawing fashion which scores every point. Two of his feminine friends, it appears, were walking down the street the other day, when they noticed another woman just in front of them. "That lady's waist is unbuckled in the back," said one to the other. "I believe I'll speak to her about it."

The other looked over the unconscious subject of comment. Then she shook her head. "I don't believe that I would say anything to her," said she. "I doubt if she is the kind of person who would appreciate your kindness. She isn't very neatly got up, don't you see? Her shoes are horribly run down at the heel."

"I don't care," said Mr. Irwin's acquaintance. "Any woman would be glad of a warning that her waist is unbuckled. I don't care if she doesn't seem to be a very nice person. I shall call her attention to it."

"And so," said Mr. Irwin, "she walked up to the stranger and tapped her on the shoulder. As the woman turned she said, just as sweetly as she knew how: 'Pardon me. But did you know that your shoes are run down at the heel?'"—Herbert Corey in Cincinnati Times-Star.

The Missing Bed.

The house dated from the fifteenth century, and visitors were permitted to go over it for sixpence a head. Of course Queen Elizabeth had slept there, and the boy in buttons who conducted the party mentioned this three times in the sacred bedroom. Most of the furniture had a look of the period, though there were a few doubtful embroideries.

"And where," one of the visitors asked, "is the bed in which Queen Elizabeth slept?"

The boy in buttons hesitated a moment and then said, "That's being made, sir."

Turned the Joke.

The following story is told of an English military officer in the Chinese army: Being visited by some friends, the captain, to show the high state of discipline of his command, sounded a night alarm. The troops turned out with commendable alacrity and fell into their places, ready for emergencies, but when they discovered the cause of this sudden interruption to their dreams they laughed heartily, thinking it a good joke. The worthy captain was elated at his success and determined to repeat the experiment. Soon after he invited another party of friends to witness the performance, and the alarm was sounded at dead of night, but not a soldier appeared, while roars of laughter from the tents showed that the joke was on the man's side this time.
